

the hook. Look at this headline, "EPA Lets Polluters Off the Hook," $4.8 billion in noncollected funds.

Mr. Speaker, I have just about had it with EPA. I am calling on the Speaker, and I am calling on Chairman MCINTOSH of the oversight committee to conduct an investigation of what they are doing. Rather than going out and enforcing environmental laws, they are using taxpayer funds to start a campaign against Congress, and this action must stop.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FUNDERBURK] is recognized for 5 minutes.

[Mr. FUNDERBURK addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

[Mr. HUNTER addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOX] is recognized for 5 minutes.

[Mr. FOX of Pennsylvania addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.]

ECONOMIC SECURITY IS A BIPARTISAN ISSUE

THE SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Texas [Ms. JACKSON-LEE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, many of us have had an opportunity to visit more extensively over the last 2 or 3 weeks with our constituents at home. It is interesting, I rose just earlier this week to indicate really what has captured the minds and the emotions of many Americans as we have watched the Republican primary proceed before our very eyes. It is not that the debate is unique, it is that maybe it is being raised when all of us happen to be focused in that direction, for the questions dealing with economic security, the well-being of this country, have been troubling many of our constituents for a number of years.

And it is not a partisan issue. It is in fact a bipartisan issue, and it calls to question the quality of life that we expect as Americans. What it does is, it should pit us toward each other and not against each other. It involves the assessment of affirmative action as a valuable tool in which we can extend, to those who have not had an opportunity, an even playing field.

It calls into question the attack on the earned income tax credit which rewards working people, working people who in essence are poor, to continue to work and not to seek welfare and dependence for them and their children. The earned income tax credit that is under assault by this Congress and by this budget process in fact enhances opportunities and does not take away from opportunities in both urban and rural America.

It helps the more than blue collar worker, the hourly worker who has not had an opportunity to salt away dollars. By them working, they then get a credit back from the Federal Government which gives them a continuing incentive to continue to work. Why should we undermine that incentive for the working poor?

Then there has been a big debate on those who would want to raise the minimum wage and those who would not, merely over a dollar at this point that is being proposed, all of the rancor, that this would destroy small businesses or that this would eliminate jobs. Do we really understand who is working in some of these places where we used to think teenagers worked? Fast food places? They are individuals who are attempting to support their family, some of them with four and five children.

□ 1600

I was told by a Member that he had a family in his district, many families, in fact, four members of the family, four children, excuse me, making a living on $15,000. Now, you wonder how those people make it. I applaud them. I applaud them for working, for keeping their family together, for striking out on their own.

But if we are to uphold the quality of life for all America, then we must fight for the economic security of our citizens. We must go to corporate America and address the question that everything is not profit and dividend, although I respect those who have had the privileges of life and have invested. I want you to be successful. But we must also reinvest in the creation of jobs.

We have been told that the telecommunications bill that has just been passed will create 6 million jobs. Some of those jobs, most of them, will be very technical positions. We must ensure that the least Americans who have tried their best with the education that they have will, in fact, seek the appropriate opportunities for work. Corporate America must reinvest back into work. It is not that jobs are leaving this country. It is that we must take a stand to create jobs and create viable work that has us making items again as we built ships, as we built items in World War II. We must be manufacturers again, and we must create opportunities for those individuals who want to hold their families together.

As I stand before you, as well as I think of economic security and opportunity, I am challenged because this month, March, is the month that we celebrate women, the historic contributions of women, when Susan B. Anthony began to talk about taking advantage of the political process and voting and standing up for what you believe in.

Well, this has not been a very good year for women, for we have found that women have become unequal both in the workplace but as well as far as constitutional and privilege and rights of privacy. For example, whatever your position is, how can you be equal with Medicare for women as opposed to men? So that women in the military would not be allowed to have abortions of their choice if paid for, so that the House banned coverage of most abortions by Federal employees health coverage, again intruding on the privacy right of women.

The House and Senate voted to prohibit the use of Federal funds to pay for abortions for Peace Corps volunteers, and so we go on and on with the onslaught and the attack on women in this Congress.

We also saw fit to provide bonus grants to States that reduce the number of abortions, not among children, and we are not talking about that question, but we are talking about adults, adult women who have the opportunity to make a choice.

One of the most egregious pieces of legislation is when a tragedy comes upon a family who desires a child and they are required to abort because of the threat of that mother. Partial abortion now has become illegal both on the physician and as well would challenge the mother to get proper medical care.

Mr. Speaker, I would say to you we need economic security for all Americans, and in respecting women, in saluting women, we need fairness for women in this legislative agenda.

OUT OF SIGHT BUT NOT FORGOTTEN

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LATOURETTE.) Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MCINTOSH] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MCINTOSH. Mr. Speaker, out of sight, out of mind.

There is a human tendency to forget those things or people that are not immediate to us. The media feeds this tendency—where stories of heroism or tragedy receive 30 seconds of air time on the evening news—and then they are forgotten.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to give my report from Indiana.

Today I commend the brave men and women serving the cause of peace in Bosnia—they may be out of sight, but they are not forgotten.

They are in Ruthie's and my prayers and in the daily prayers of the good people of Indiana's Second District, especially the school children.

Last December, right before Christmas Ruthie and I were fortunate